Your message states that " the execution fee for tourist/business passport applications might be lowered due to the effects of increased demand lowering the Department of State's costs for passport acceptance, adjudication and production."

While I am not quite sure just how increase demand can lower the cost for DOS, it certainly does not affect the costs for the acceptance agents who are at the start of the entire process. If nothing else, in the four years that we have proudly been acceptance agents, the wages of the personnel doing the initial contact have risen at least at the rate of the cost of living. While I am not quite sure just how increase demand can lower the cost for DOS, it certainly does not affect the costs for the acceptance agents who are at the start of the entire process. If nothing else, in the four years that we have proudly been acceptance agents, the wages of the personnel doing the initial contact have risen at least at the rate of the cost of living. The total increase of the passport fees in March of 2005 helped with the escalating cost of the personnel doing the work, increasing postage rates and fuel surcharges have had their negative effects. Since we are a non-postal acceptance agency I
